

Playful Questions

To help you spark some generativity and change the conversation, we've created a number of playful questions for different situations that you can tweak to make them authentic for you.

Someone you respect is posting about #socialdistance on their feed.

- But wouldn't you miss me if we cut the social? How about #physicaldistancing instead?
- How might we keep being social while distancing? Maybe #physicaldistancing instead?

Someone you care about is talking about social distancing as part of caring for each others' wellbeing.

- Given connection is at the heart of wellbeing, how might we get an extra side of the social, with our daily dose of physical distance?
- Hey, can we have a social boost for our wellbeing while maintaining the physical distance we need?
- I know the social really boosts my wellbeing. How might we keep the connection while honoring the physical distance?

Someone you work with is talking about social distancing as part of your company response to COVID-19.

- How can we ensure we're helping people keep a safe physical distance, but also dial up the opportunities for social connection?
- If we want our people to feel connected and engaged, how might we make sure our physical distance policies come with an extra dose of social connection opportunities?

You find yourself standing in a shop, school, or anywhere in your community near others with signs telling you to social distance from each other.

- What's the point of all these wonderful human beings to play with, if we're socially distant? How can we stay physically distanced, but still stay socially connected as we wait here together?
- I miss people. How about we stay physically distanced, but get more socially connected?
- What has pleasantly surprised you with all that's been happening?